PUB HISTORY

For its first three-quarters of a century of life, this beautiful building served as a funeral home. But the place was never just for the grieving. There were many weddings held here, too, accompanied by music played on the 1925 theater organ. If you're wondering, "Pop Goes the Weasel" was the most unusual request the organist played for a funeral service here. Because it was built in 1932, during the depths of the Depression, some of the finest craftsmen around were available and affordable. Most notable today are ironworker O. B. Dawson and light fixture maker, Fred Baker, both of whom later contributed greatly to the décor of Timberline Lodge.
