OUR HISTORY

The smallest commercial building on the West Coast is how this flat iron was billed at the time of its construction in 1917. When a coffee shop and catering kitchen jammed into this wedge-shaped space in the '40s, working men, transients, and prostitutes rubbed shoulders over a cup of coffee. Beginning in the '70s, conversations uttered within its walls were picked up by thousands of listeners. Now its miniaturized setting features a fly's view of life on West Burnside. Plus, the most unique bar in Portland is in the basement. Cut off from the light and the outside world, the Annex's basement bar is a subterranean cave that evokes the 50-year-old image of a hide-out for the French Resistance.
