OUR HISTORY

The Elks Temple has lived several, very disparate lives. The architecturally striking building was constructed in 1915-1916 as the new and far grander home to Tacoma's Lodge# 174 of the Benevolent and Protective Order of the Elks. The Elks' tenure here lasted until 1965, and during that half century they contributed immensely to the community with fundraisers, sponsorship of youth athletic teams, holiday gift giveaways for the underprivileged, purchasing of medical equipment for the local hospitals, etc., etc. Of course, the Elks had their fun, too. In the 1970s and '80s, after the Elks had moved out, the building was reborn as a venue for catered events, that ranged dramatically from African American cotillions to the city's first openly gay gatherings, to dinner theater to rock concerts and Hollywood movie filming. Then in 1986, all came to a halt, the old Lodge was abandoned and boarded up for the next 30 years, creating a great opportunity for the underground community of graffiti artists to use the entire place as a giant canvas for their stunning, colorful work. The latest incarnation kicked off in April 2019 when McMenamins reopened the old landmark.
