OUR HISTORY

Believe it or not, Kalama has always boasted a cosmopolitan streak. Our Kalama Harbor Lodge was built in 2018 on the banks of the mighty Columbia River, a waterway that from the earliest days served as the primary transportation route of the native Chinook and Cowlitz people. In the 1800s, British and American settlers and traders entered the mix along with some Chinese, African Americans and Hawaiians. The most notable of the latter was John Kalama, namesake of the nearby river. In 1870, John Kalama's name was tapped again for the new community established at what was then the Northern Pacific Railway's new western terminus. Kalama, small as it was, developed into a busy and important global deep-water port, home to many logging, fishing, grain export and boat building industries, which continues to this day.
