Welcome to the Kapu Hut, inspired by adventure and a curiosity about the world at large, whether it be far-off islands or nearby venues. Though the Hawaiian word kapu is generally translated as "forbidden," all are welcome to engage the senses and open the third eye in this place reminiscent of tropical locales. Here you will find masks and objects from around the world, photos from an era of psychedelic enlightenment, and plentiful libations... liquid alchemy!

Take caution, brave traveler, the spirits of the tropics may lead you many places and enlightenment may be found, but there are some roads better left untraveled...

Pictured above is a sketch of a Sepik River mask from the village of Kandangai in the East Sepik province of Papua New Guinea. It is but one of an incredible variety of art from the Sepik River, which snakes 650 miles through the island. Above the bar you will find a pair of Sepik masks as well as Japanese theater masks. Gaze around the room at masks from Ivory Coast, art and history of the Grateful Dead, wood carved Moai, and nautical lights and lanterns.

Thank you for coming!
