OUR HISTORY

"Gentlemen's resort" is how the Olympic Club was billed in 1908 when it opened its doors to Centralia's loggers, miners, and railroad workers. And any doubts as to the Club's intended clientele were dispelled by a sign posted above the door which read "Ladies Patronage Not Solicited." Unlike most saloons of this era, the Oly Club survived Prohibition not by sales of the soft drinks it advertised but through the bootleg liquor it didn't advertise. After nine decades, the original bar, pool tables, Tiffany lamps, cash registers, and wood stove can still be seen in all their glory (not to mention those porcelain beauties in the men's room--you could live in those things!). And nowadays, drinks and females don't have to be kept to the shadows. In fact, many things are coming to light, ranging from a motorcycle sidecar to a pickle barrel with a trap door. The Mission's Eiki projector, Oak Hills' two feet, and Jimmy Hoffa are expected to be unearthed soon, but for the time being, Elmer is keeping them (and other secrets) sealed in the basements.
